Abstract

This paper examines the variety of cooperation between industry and academic institutions concerning learning with and for Information and Communication Technology (ICT). The focus of analysed initiatives is with regard to the ways in which youth employability and entrepreneurship can be enhanced via ICT (for) learning cooperation. Research takes place within the project I-LINC . The aim of I-LINC is to encourage cooperation between different stakeholders in the area of education and ICT. I-LINC will achieve this goal by developing a European stakeholder platform with various online and offline activities for stakeholder participation. We see higher education institutions as one important group of stakeholders with regard to enhancing youth employability and youth entrepreneurship.
